A TERRIBLE SCENE OF DEATH AND DESC. LATION.

Nearly Two Bundred Lives Lost by the Flood-Heartrending Scenes-Sufferings

NEW YORK, May 18. - A correspondent of the Herald telegraphs as follows from and it is impossible to conceive the terrific orce of the flood except from the effects. Mill river was in many parts a walled stream, but the huge pieces of rock which formed its embankment were combanks look like a rocky shore, the massive sones being thrown about so indiscriminately. In other places rocks and trees torn from the earth, and debris from the mills which were torn down by the flood, are all there is of the river side. Even long pieces of cloth from the cotton mills are so interwoven with debris of every kind that they eem a natural part of nature's handiwork. The roads have disappeared with the banks, and in many places te-day vehicles passed where yesterday flowed the stream, while low the river runs in what was formerly the till standing was of such a diversified chareter as almost to bothe description. A huge himmey semetimes todicated the site of a rest will. Some of the large mills of the alley, as I have already said, have left no ign of their existence. Many houses and sops were completely shattered to pieces nd scattered to no one knows where. Such otoplete devastation is not more remarkable than the partial destruction of buildings to which I just now referred. Some houses were empleiely reliabed by the flood, leaving only the frame-work. The foundations and valls of others were swept away, leaving he trane structure very much awry. Some vere balf swept off, leaving the other half where it stood before; some were carried down the stream and stranged. Some were urned over on their sides, and I saw one which now stood on its roof. The wrecks ire of every description, but the frame buildngs were not so completely demolished as hose of other materials. When a brick or tone house felt the force of the flood it was dmost certain to yield completely.

At least three of the villages-Williams enry, Haydensville, and Leeds-are pain yzed beyond the hope of recovery. It maters little how much money was actually lest, for its sum total is the hand which fed the inhabitants of what was yesterday a happy village. To-day it is desolution, and -morrow it will be worse, for it will be topulessness. When the dead are buried; when the extent of the bereavement is fully understood; when the scene of desolation scomes tamiliar, will come the relation, and with the relation, perhaps, despair. I saw on old man this morning, while his neighfors were busy examining the heaps of de ers along the course of the flood for the dead bodies, engaged in gathering buttons on a string. Equally aimless must be the future of these people, unless capital flows leave to resign the pastoral charge of them, into the valley again almost as rapidly as it acquieseing, but with reluctance, and exwas swept away.

The devastation at Leeds is indescribable. Only three houses on the cast side of the river remain in their original positions. The water first struck the Novotuck silk dam, a olid structure, and ploughed through it as if it had been a bank of saud. The dam was built twenty-five years ago, and had a tweny-six-foot fall in the centre. It originally cost $50,000, and was retaced a few years

igo. The stone wall of the mill facing the mes poorly swont away. The mill as damaged but slightly, but work will not be resumed on it for months, thus throwing many bands out of employment. The silk boarding-house was totally wrecked. All the inmales escaped except Captain Yanghan and Miss Woodward, both of whom lest their lives by returning for some valuables. Miss Woodward was a daughter of the old proprietor of the Woodward

The old wooden mill, occupied in part as saw-mill, was next crushed by the seething waters. The flood in its course took Selectman W. F. Quigley's house down the current a few rods, leaving only the old L part on the site. In this L part Mrs. Quigley. two daughters, and Miss Marble, a teacher in the Leeds school, were sitting, baving just completed breakfast. They flew into the upper story, and so exceptd. It was while they were standing here that the main out the surging sea. Gazing out of a window, they saw Walter Humphreys on the roof of a house that appeared as a ship on dow, and Miss Nellie Quigley and Miss Mardrew him into the little harbor that bravely stood out the storm, and he was saved. Mr. Humphreys's family, a wife and two chil-Humphreys was surprised by the flood, and she and the old lady took each a child and stood upon a bed, helding the little ones above the waves that were clamoring for more life to destrey. Frederick Clough, a foreman at the button factory, heard the roar of the coming flood and hastened to Mrs. Bonney's house, and, as it were, commanded all those preseal there to flee. Mrs. Benney obeyed, running to the hills. Clough, selzing one of Mr. Ryan's children, a granddaughter of Mrs. Bonney, begged Mrs. Mary Ryan and fixed to the spot in terror and fright. He another child, and so were swept away. Mrs.

George P. Warner's button factory, which was totally ruined. The alarm had been given and all the employes except Carrie Bonney and Evelyn Sherwood escaped. These two became bewildered and started for home, when they were swept down the current. Mr. Warner's loss is $125,000. He will resume business, though his losses have stream. Large houses were reduced in a short time to déoris, no two boards remainwas giso shown by the fact that nearly every tree in the flood was stripped of its bark, while the remains of nearly all the victims were stripped of their clothing and horribly mangled. One headless trunk of a man was found his borses alive in the stable after the flood, with only their heads sticking up out of the mud and water. Ryan Moran's tene-

were all numb and half dead, but were all right after a good rubbing. One little boy come floating down the flood to Leeds on a board from somewhere above. A French Canadian, pointing to two little boys, said: "I had eight children, but only these are left." He was afterward made glad, however, by the news that a bright little son, three years old, was rescued while floating seen sailing down the current in its cradle; but it was soon engulfed and never seen more. A boy six years old floated down from Leeds elinging to the roof of a house, and was finally rescued. Of one large family at Leeds all were lost save the youngest child. The great loss of life at Leeds is due to the which formed its embankment were to a sletchy swept away. In some places the fact that most of the families were at breakfast, and were swept away without a moment's warning.

It is said that the cries of the drowning and terrified victims were heart-rending. Children clung to their parents and parents to their children, and together they sank in the angry torrent. One man was seen to go over the Skinnersville silk-mill dam, standing erect on some timber, and then he suddenly disappeared from sight.

street, where it had been at play. All its relations had been lost.

Among the sad accidents was that of seven roung girls who climbed into an apple tree, thinking it would stand, but they were all swept away. The body of a little child four Department building. years old was found with a pair of new shoes in its hard. In the toes of the shoes were mother had probably tried to save. Agricultural Department, &c. [Special telegram to the Dispatch.] WASHINGTON, May 19 .- Congress is commencing active work in order to get an adournment by the 22d of June. To-day the Senate passed the legislative, judicial, and executive appropriation bill, after two days' discussion, which is an unprecedented short time. An important amendment to the bill provides that no civil officer of the Government shall receive any perquisites or compensation beyond that allowed by law. Upon this amendment there was a lengthy discussion regarding the Agricultural Department and the occupancy of that building by the Commissioner and his family. An amendment that he be allowed to retain his residence in that building was rejected. The debate was very uncomplimentary to France. Commissioner Watts, and some of the Senators animadverted severely upon the Department as not being in the interests of agriculture. The amendment as adopted will have the effect of ousting Mr. Watts from the
